

Logical existentialism

Tuesday, 8 June 2021

Political class conflict

It is criminal to exploit violence in the pursuits of the larceny of extortion but we see it at high frequency due to the blinding and desensitizing effects of violence. This cycle has become the modus operandi of daily life for many who have no greater concern than to effect any exploitation regardless of the considerations and laws of society.

The distinctions of violence are simple. The differentiation of intent is an examination of the self evident. The dissuasion of objective by violence effectively obviates criminality, promoting the ease of benefit of larceny and felony.

The prevalence of larceny and felony in government and industry is amplified by the political class conflict produced by exploitation media and politics.

This metaphysical violence appears as an ubiquitous culture of fear to those submerged by the gravity of the experience. And it is amplified and propagated by errors of objective induced by errors of conception.

In the United States there is one class of person, the human being. The class hierarchies of our ancient and medieval history divide the sovereignty of humanity and the efficacy of society. Our laws in theory and application conserve life as humanity in the conservation of the society and environment that sustain us.

It is the necessity of this existence that we respect society and environment in order that we have something tomorrow as well as yesterday and today. In order that we not destroy our own children by accident or purpose, directly or indirectly.

John Pritchard, @syntelos [CC-BY-NC]