

Political narcissism

Thursday, 3 June 2021

Delusional fantasy

It should be well known that delusions of grandeur is common to any national politics. At the concentration of our power we exercise, discuss, describe, and study. It is rational and it is necessary to do so in the service of awareness and reason. However, the subject induces hallucination in the unprepared. In those for whom individual and social relationship concepts are not well established, understood, and developed, the property of relationship or society is “free as in beer”. A subscription to that concept is not unlike believing that one is God or King. Such a belief induces delusion, which is referred to as delusions of grandeur.

John Pritchard, @syntelos [CC-BY-NC]